Seventy First Congress Adjourns Session

Many Bills Await Hoover Signature After Adjournment

Physically Impossible For Chief Executive to Get to Bills Soon

EXCITEMENT GREAT
Much Legislation Killed By Closing of Session Wednesday

WASHINGTON—(P)—President Herbert Hoover was informed by Attorney General Mitchell, that there was nothing in the law which compelled him to sign all the bills passed by congress before the session adjourned at noon Wednesday. The President has ten days after the adjournment in which to take action in any legislation.

Mitchell's opinion is seen as the end of a custom which has been observed for the past 100 years.

More than three hundred bills have been received at the White House within the past three days and it is physically impossible to study and sign them before adjournment of the session, it was said.

WASHINGTON—(P)—The seventy-first congress adjourned Wednesday at noon amidst a tension reminiscent of the most exciting days of its two years.

That contentious spirit which has swept the senate from the start prevailed to the end with a filibuster by Senator Thomas of Oklahoma tying up all activity in the closing hours.

Thomas filibustered for authorization in the investigation of the oil industry. The Thomas filibuster killed all pending legislation including the Maternity Aid Bill; the Jenkins Bill for a 90 per cent cut in immigration for two years and a batch of nominations, including Representative Elliott, of Indiana, a republican, to be assistant comptroller and the Vestal copyright measure.

Regular Meeting B.&P.W. Club Held
Importance of Business Women's Week, March 8 to 14 Stressed

Miss Evelyn Lewis was hostess at the regular meeting of the Hope Business and Professional Women's Club which was held at the Hotel Barlow Tuesday evening. The long dining tables were bright with a profusion of yellow flowers, which with their green foliage, resulted in a predominance of the club's chosen colors of yellow and green.

The program was intended to stress the importance of Business Women's Week, March 8 to 14, and the first speaker of the evening, Mrs. Brooks Ellison, discussed the subject, "What Is Requested of a Woman Going Into the Business World Today."

"A workable knowledge of the business or profession one is to enter, is the first requirement. But, failures are caused by people trying to make a living working at something that is distasteful to them, and one should be very careful to ascertain the thing which they like most to do and then engage in it," said Mrs. Ellison.

"Stagnation is to be avoided, and one should earnestly endeavor to keep abreast of the newest and best developments in their chosen line of work, by studying text-books or journals pertaining to their occupation. Personality should not be overlooked, and dignity is a valuable asset to acquire and maintain."

"A wise woman tries to please the man who is paying her a salary and during working hours, his business and its welfare should be the employee's first consideration, and absolute loyalty to him and his interests is a necessary requisite for success," concluded Mrs. Ellison.

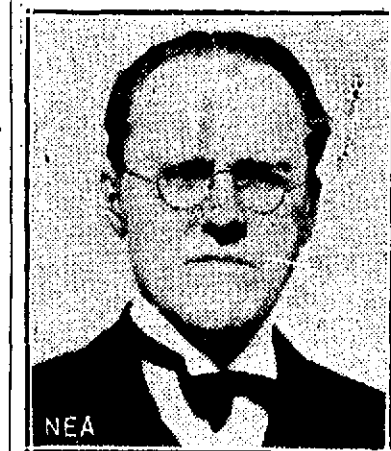

In a clever contest in which twelve outstanding women's work and lives were delineated, four members tied for the prize, which was won in a guessing contest by Miss Volle Reed.

Dr. Elia E. Champlin read an interesting paper on the history and objectives of Business Women's Week, and in the business session which followed the program, some of the suggestions she outlined were discussed and acted upon.

Miss Mary Arnold, president, told of the Sixth District Conference which was held in Texarkana on February 21st and 22nd, and asked that some of the ideas obtained there by those attending from this club, be incorporated into our activities.

Miss Arnold appointed Mrs. Brooks Ellison to succeed Miss Mary Ellison Arnold, now engaged in Government work.

Pastor Faces Jail

The Rev. Emil Swenson, above, flatly refused to reveal confidences made to him by a parishioner, Arnold Sudeth, when the latter's domestic troubles led to a divorce trial before Judge Paul W. Guilford in Minneapolis. The judge held that Swenson's Lutheran affiliations do not countenance the confessional, and that Rev. Swenson was guilty of contempt of court in not revealing confidences. The pastor faces a possible jail term unmoved.

South Launches Cotton Campaign

Aims to Aid Farming Conditions and Better Prices

MEMPHIS—(AP)—A campaign to increase the consumption of cotton, major crop of the south for more than a century, is underway, aimed toward bettering prices and improving farming conditions.

An educational program carried on in newspapers and magazines and mentioned prominently by radio broadcasters is being carried towards the consumer, but towards the grower and has a double purpose. Firstly, that of increasing the consumption of cotton, and secondly, that of getting producers to grow less cotton and to grow this at decreased costs.

Agricultural speakers and writers point out that salvation of the cotton grower is the planting of other crops which will make the planter and his family self sustaining should the cotton crop fail, or the market drop and he lose money on the crop.

While this campaign is on, thousands of college men and women and their younger brothers and sisters in private, parochial and grade schools are entering in the spirit of the project.

The youths are aiding in the distribution of cotton information. Cotton dresses are being worn by school girls of all ages as their part of the drive. At Southwestern, co-educational college located here, the co-eds agreed to wear cotton dresses to classes and signified their intention of wearing them at parties.

Popular Prescott Man Killed in Auto Wreck Near Waldo

Nat Martin Instantly Killed, Two Companions Injured Tuesday

FUNERAL THURSDAY

All Are Business Men of the Nevada County Seat Town

A business trip to Falcon, Ark., ended disastrously for three prominent Prescott men Tuesday afternoon near Waldo, Ark., when a southbound Cotton Belt passenger train struck their car, killing one and injuring the others.

Nat Martin, 54, real estate man was killed instantly and A. M. Denman, 70, of the state revenue department, and J. M. Stripling, 68, sustained injuries.

The accident occurred about 3:45 p. m. at a crossing three miles south of Waldo, as the men were returning to Prescott from Falcon, where they had been to inspect the Reed No. 1 oil well being drilled in south Nevada county.

Martin, who was driving the car, apparently failed to see the approaching train as he drove over the crossing. The automobile was demolished.

Denman and Stripling were put aboard the train and taken to Texarkana, arriving there at 5:30 p. m. They were met by the East ambulances and rushed to the Cotton Belt hospital. After taking X-ray pictures, attending physician reported the condition of the two men as not serious.

Fruit Sprays Profitable To The Small Orchardist

Suggested Formulas Found Effective Following Tests at Fruit and Truck Branch Experiment Station, Located Near This City

Since many orchards will probably be neglected, the small fruit grower will likely find it especially profitable to spray this year, states G. W. Ware, assistant director, in charge of the Fruit and Truck Branch Experiment Station.

Spraying is not as complicated as it might appear. There is no "cure all," and one must keep in mind that a peach tree needs one spray, the plum another, and the grape still another. Horses and cows require different treatment for various ailments. This is the case with fruit trees.

The dormant spray should have already been applied and it will soon be time to put on the first summer spray for most fruits. Following is some simple spray information which can be effectively used:

Peaches—Three summer sprays are required. The first, the shuck spray, should be applied soon after the blossoms fall, the second spray follows in three weeks and the third about a month before the fruit ripens. The materials needed are the same for all three sprays, are mixed as follows, and known as "Dry Mix":

8 lbs. sulphur
4 lbs. Slack lime
1 lb. lead arsenate
1/2 lb. Kaysos.

These materials are thoroughly mixed, made into a paste and added to 50 gallons of water. The quantity desired can be made in proportion. Curculio, brown rot and scale are controlled.

Plums and Cherries—Sprays are also necessary for plums and cherries, but a red liquid known as commercial lime sulphur is used instead of dry-mix. This solution can be purchased locally. 1 1/2 gallons of this material and 1 lb. of lead arsenate is used to 50 gallons of water. The first application is made soon after the blossoms or shucks have fallen, the second three weeks later, and the last one about a month before the fruit ripens. Curculio, leaf spot and brown rot are controlled.

Grapes—Four sprays are necessary for grapes. In each case, 1 1/2 lbs. of dry lead arsenate and Bordeaux 4-4-50 (4 lbs. lime, 4 lbs. blue stone and 50 gallons of water), is used. The first is applied just before blooming, the second immediately after blooming, and the third spray is applied two weeks after the second. Black rot, downy mildew and the flea beetle are controlled by this spray.

Full information on the spraying of all fruits can be obtained by writing the Agricultural Extension Service, 310 Federal Bank and Trust Bldg., Little Rock, for "Spray Calendar No. 143".

TUSCON, Ariz.—(P)—Intercollegiate athletic activities are benefiting boy students at the expense of the girls, in the opinion of Miss Ina E. Gittings, head of the department of physical education at the University of Arizona.

Miss Gittings advocates that there be athletic competition among girl students, not to much for the spectacle as for benefit to players.

"It should be emphasized," Miss Gittings said, "that girl games be coached and officiated by competent women only."

Gypsy had begun typing again but now she stopped. "It isn't five years," she said, "it's 19 months, two weeks and three days—exactly." She glanced up at the electric clock on the wall.

"The boat lands at 12 o'clock and I've just got to get there. Turtle said I could leave as soon as I've finished this tabulation. There—"

MAD MARRIAGE

by LAURA LOU BROOKMAN

Author of "HEART HUNGRY, etc."

CHAPTER I

The clatter of flying typewriter keys stopped abruptly. Gypsy McBride's exclamation was sharp and short.

"All hot and bothered today, aren't you?" Jean Foster at the desk at the right spoke without glancing up from her stenographic pad. There were three other girls in the large, sunny office of the MacNamara Electrical Equipment Co., but they were gathered at the opposite side of the room.

"What's on your mind?" Jean asked.

Gypsy frowned at the sheet of paper in the machine, tore it out and reached for a fresh one.

"That's the third time I've ruined the same page," she said ruefully. "Of course when I'm trying to hurry Turtle would give me figures to tabulate!"

She fitted carbon between the two white sheets and adjusted them in the machine. Gypsy's lips set in a straight, brief crimson line. With a quick, nervous gesture she pushed back a strand of hair from her forehead.

"Say -- you're not marrying the Prince of Wales today, are you? Or flying the Atlantic?" the blond Miss Foster continued.

In spite of haste and the waiting columns of figures Gypsy paused.

"Didn't you know?" she exclaimed. "Alan's coming home!"

There was a tense, breathless quality about the girl. Her pink cheeks burned a shade deeper as she spoke, contrasting becomingly with the dark ivory of her skin -- that warm ochre coloring responsible for the name of "Gypsy." There had been another name but no one, even the girl herself ever thought of it. Gypsy was dark-skinned, brown-eyed, with long brows and lashes that made the eyes seem larger.

By classic standards Gypsy McBride features were irregular. Her lips, flashing into a crimson smile as she spoke, were too wide. Her nose was small. No one could deny that the heavy, weaving hair drawn into a low knot at the back of her neck was an effective frame for the oval face, but it heightened the look which made strangers often ask Gypsy if she were Spanish. She was a small, slim girl seated at her typewriter. Gypsy looked younger than her 19 years.

"Who's Alan?" demanded Jean Foster.

"Didn't you ever hear me talk about Alan? That's funny! Alan Crosby by his name is. He's going to be a great painter and he's been about studying and -- oh, he's the handsomest thing! Everybody who knows Alan thinks he's wonderful. Wait until you

Costly Stupidity

A GLIMPSE at current history sometimes makes one wonder if ordinary human stupidity and incompetence do not cause more trouble and more suffering than all of the malice and wickedness in the world put together.

An example of this is found in Winston Churchill's "World Crisis," that fascinating description of the World War as a member of the British cabinet saw it.

Churchill, as first lord of the admiralty, was the moving spirit behind the ill-starred Gallipoli adventure, and the misfortunes of that costly expedition were hardly his fault. The expedition was crippled by dumbness and failure from the start, and nowhere was this more clear than in the tragic Suvla Bay landing.

French and English troops had already obtained a foothold at the lower tip of the peninsula. Farther up the peninsula the Australians had come ashore and established themselves. In neither place was it possible to make much headway against the strong Turkish trench system.

So a flank attack was planned. Under cover of darkness, a division of troops was thrown ashore at Suvla Bay, several miles up the coast. This division was to press forward promptly, cross the peninsula, and take the defending Turks in the rear. If it succeeded the peninsula would be taken, Constantinople would fall and the war would soon be over.

The division got ashore at dawn. In the foothills to oppose it was a scant battalion of Turkish troops. The division had only to move quickly to gain its goal. The Turks could not possibly stop it.

The general commanding the division was a stolid and sedentary gentleman accustomed to caution and methodical, bit-by-bit movements. Instead of ordering his men forward as soon as they got ashore he had them dig trenches on the beach to prepare to repel an attack. In the afternoon hundreds of them were dismissed and allowed to go in bathing. All in all, this man wasted 24 priceless hours before he set his troops in motion.

By that time it was too late. The Turks had had time to bring up reinforcements. A large percentage of the British division was sacrificed, and the objective was not reached. Gallipoli held out, Constantinople was not captured, and the war lasted three years longer.

All of this—a price simply staggering to contemplate—came because one man in a position of authority was either stupid, incompetent, or both.

Could there be a more dreadful testimonial to the mischief that those two qualities can create?

Light Beyond the Stars

THE real poets and artists of this modern world sometimes seem to be the scientists.

Dr. Frederick H. Sears is assistant director of Mount Wilson Observatory, in California, and hardly rates as a visionary. But it is just such men as he who dream strange dreams and see bright visions these days, and draw stupendous pictures out of the gulf beyond the stars.

The other day Dr. Sears discovered a cosmic sunset—a tremendous, wildly spectacular affair somewhere beyond the great star Alpha Sygni, several hundred trillion miles away. In that remote region, millions of leagues in extent, some 750 stars are creating a gigantic sunset—throwing bright beams of light through a strange dust cloud, wasting millions of miles of brilliant colors on empty space so profoundly distant that we cannot measure it except in figures that our minds cannot grasp.

There is mystery in it, too, and a hint of undiscovered worlds, just as there is in all good sunsets. For the dying light of these sinking stars is illuminated by the edge of one of the most mysterious of all wonders of the heavens; the great "North American" nebula, a dark shape that for some incomprehensible reason bears the shape of the North American continent. Beyond this floating continent the stars go down; and a telescope on a California mountain picks up the glow of a sunset that happened hundreds of years ago.

Now all of this is just a routine pronouncement from a sedate scientist; but it also happens to be the stuff of which poetry, and all high art, is made. For what is it, after all, but the detection in the outer void of a wild and compelling bit of beauty such as Blake might have conjured up? What is it but a piercing of the veil that divides the seen from the unseen, just as poets and all artists have striven to do for many centuries?

Rudyard Kipling, looking ahead to the time when earth's last picture is painted, predicted:

And those that were good shall be happy; they shall sit in a golden chair;

They shall splash at a ten-league canvas with brushes of comets' hair.

And here, beyond the mysterious North American nebula, it is happening; a prodigious sunset, with the light from hundreds of stars turning a cosmic dust cloud into gold and crimson and amber . . . splashing at a ten-league canvas with brushes of comets' hair . . . material for dreams and visions.

There is no getting around it. It is the scientist who is the poet today.

March may shriek and March may roar,
We have heard his voice before;
He'll be beaten, this rely on,
By a doughty dandelion.
March may screech and March may scream,
Bold and dangerous may seem;
He'll be vanquished, don't forget,
By a modest violet.
March may brag and March may boast,
Think himself a dashing host,
But his claims will all be doubted,
When a cowslip has him routed.

MAD MARRIAGE
by LAURA LOU BROOKMAN Author of HEART HUNGRY, etc.

"Will you add these two tables to that list you're working on, Miss McBride?" she said. "I'd like to have them as soon as possible."

Miss Tuttle laid five pages of penciled manuscript on Gypsy's desk. More figures! Miss Tuttle's countenance was severe and business-like. She was a woman in the late thirties with slim, pointed features in keeping with a too-slim figure. Dark-rimmed spectacles on a black ribbon increased the impression of formidable authority. She paused long enough to give Gypsy exact instructions about the typing. Miss Tuttle spoke in a loud, high-pitched voice and without smiling.

"Check the statistics after you've finished," she added. "You know how serious an error would be."

Gypsy knew fully. She expressed herself completely on this subject as soon as Miss Tuttle had disappeared from the room. With each terse syllable she hammered the keyboard of her typewriter viciously.

Jean Foster was sympathetic. "That's a dirty trick!" she said indignantly. "Why didn't you tell her you couldn't do it, Gypsy? Why didn't you say you were busy?"

The other girl shook her head. "No use wasting time in argument. Never mind about Tuttle. I'll get even with her for this. I'll get even all right!" She glanced at the clock, then bent over her copy. The staccato tap-tap of flying typewriter keys grew faster.

A moment later and Jean's voice, lower pitched interrupted: "Gypsy—give me half of that, I've got time to help."

"Would you?"

"Sure. I've got to stay until 1:30 today anyhow. Show me what you want me to do."

Gypsy's quick smile was grateful. There was no time to lose in words. She divided the pages and gave the other girl directions. After that the clatter of the machines doubled. For nearly 10 minutes they worked. Then a shadow fell over Gypsy's shoulder.

"Isn't this the day of the Fond Lover's return, Miss McBride?" Gypsy did not look up.

"Why? Do you happen to be interested?" she inquired steadily. She knew it was Clara Howard who was standing behind her. Clara was the one member of the stenographic department with whom Gypsy McBride clashed regularly. Everything about the two girls seemed antagonistic. Gypsy was small, dark, outspoken, vigorous in her likes and dislikes. Clara was blond. She was tall, moved languorously and spoke with an ingratiating drawl. Clara was adept at flattery, and a favorite with Miss Tuttle. Gypsy knew it was not friendliness that had brought the other girl to her desk that morning. She went on with her work but Clara lingered.

"Interested? Of course I'm interested. Haven't we been hearing every day for the last six months about this handsome hero of yours who has Hollywood and all points east and west beaten for looks and talent?"

Clara turned toward Jean Foster. "Maybe you haven't heard about Gypsy's romance," she said. "My dear, you don't know what you've missed! It's the perfect love affair! Gypsy has a beau she hasn't seen for years because he's been studying to be an artist. In Paris! Living in a garret and eating crusts and all the while remaining true to Gypsy's memory. Don't you love it? He sends her picture post cards."

The tone in which Clara spoke made every word ridiculous. Gypsy colored but she did something of which she was proud for days. She kept her temper.

The other girl waited apparently disappointed. Then Clara said slowly: "What'll you do, Gypsy, if he walks down the gangplank with a wife and three children?"

There was a titter from across the room. Jean Foster spoke up defensively. "We've got work to get out, Clara. Don't you think you could postpone the comedy?"

"Oh, my dear—I beg your pardon!" Miss Howard's voice registered a drop to icy temperature. "Didn't know you were playing little helper. Jean. You must excuse me."

Gypsy's "Don't mention it!" was equally formal. Her anger was tempered by the thought that, of all the girls in the office, Clara Howard was the one she least wished to know that Jean was sharing her duties. Now Clara knew. It would be interesting to see what damaging use she would try to make of this information.

Two little wrinkles appeared in Gypsy's forehead just above her nose. She looked up at the clock.

Now Gypsy was arranging the type-written sheets. She got them wrong twice, stopped and began over again. She had them all together at last. Ten neat pages and eight sets of carbon. It was 25 minutes of 12. With good luck she could reach the dock in time to see the great steamer let down the gangplanks.

Gypsy glanced down at her morning's work. "Check the figures for errors," Miss Tuttle had said. Why—it would take almost all of her precious 25 minutes to read copy on those 10 pages! Tuttle had doubled the work on the day she knew Gypsy was in a rush to leave. Probably had done it purposely. Well, it was too late now! Not for all the office executives in the world would Gypsy miss meeting the boat which was to bring Alan Crosby home again.

She jumped up, gathered together the pages and rustling through a desk drawer for purse, gloves and vanity case. She hurried into the adjoining office and laid the manuscript on Miss Tuttle's desk.

The older woman nodded and her straight lips tightened. Gypsy had reached the door when she heard her name called. She whirled about. "Yes, Miss Tuttle?"

"You were careful to check your copies with the originals on this work, I suppose?"

Surely it was a white lie and surely it was forgivable. Gypsy answered without a moment of hesitation. "Yes, Miss Tuttle."

"Very well. That's all."

Gypsy didn't give the matter another thought. She knew that memoranda for directors' meetings were important, that prices and matters of policy might be determined by them. She knew the penalty such an error might bring and she forgot all these things.

Down the hall she nearly ran to get her coat and hat. Jean Foster was waiting for her in the dressing room. Gypsy had one hand on the door when something in the other girl's

COULDN'T SLEEP NIGHT THROUGH

Lady Who Had Suffered Took Cardui Until She Felt Perfectly Well.

Huntington, W. Va.—How a West Virginia woman got rid of a nervous, painful condition is described below by Mrs. Nettie Meehling, of 50 "A" Street, this city, who writes:

"Twelve years ago, I was in bad health. I was nervous. I couldn't eat, sleep or work. My household tasks were a burden, and I had to drag around to get them done. I could not sleep a night through, and at the least thing I would go all to pieces. My back ached and my limbs hurt, too."

"I began taking Cardui because a friend urged me to do so. It was not long until I was feeling much better. My improvement was steady. I soon got so I could eat and sleep just like I did before I was taken sick. I continued taking Cardui until I felt perfectly well."

"Since that time I have taken Cardui when I was run-down and felt weak. I can recommend Cardui to other women for I found it a great help when I was ill."

Sold by all druggists.

HOOKS AND SLIDES

Yale! How Could You!

FOR some years, the creme de la creme of gridiron events has been the Yale-Harvard game. That is, of course, according to Harvard's way of putting it. Yale played Princeton, too, but then that was just like Yale playing Millsaps or Stetson—it didn't count for much. The important fact was that Yale played her last game of the season with fair Harvard, and all the rest of the EH football schedule led up to that struggle.

Now EH Yale does a startling thing. The noble old school announces that hereafter Harvard shall close Yale's season only every other year, and that the alternate final foe of the Blue will be that old meanie, Princeton.

Awful Things Ahead

THE Harvard date with Yale will remain as usual—the Saturday before Thanksgiving—but Princeton will be played by Yale before Harvard one year and after Harvard the next. Thus, in 1932 Yale will meet Harvard the week after Princeton. The dreadful thing will happen in 1933 when Harvard will have to play Yale before Princeton does.

Now it would be just like Prof. Harlow Shapley, the Harvard astronomer, to discover a new of football rosters dwelling on the sun, and all of them wearing Princeton colors and mocking the dear old Harvard accent.

Yale's move may go farther than any conference between athletic heads toward the eventual restoration of football relations between Nassau and the Crimson. Then again, it may not. Harvard and Princeton are "funny that way." Harvard has always been painted as looking upon the Tiger, even in days when the old Big Three was functioning on a grand scale, as an opponent not quite worthy of the splendid Harvard association, and Princeton has resented what it regards as a bit of smoothness on Harvard's part.

Looking Backward

AS far as football prowess is concerned, the Big Three is not the Big Three it used to be. Un-

DID YOU KNOW THAT—

A second base the competition is hot between Al Hildebrand, son of George Hildebrand, American League umpire, and Stan Shepard, a regular last year, says a bulletin from the University of Southern California. Activities of the Associated Students of the University of California yielded a net profit for the fall of 1930 of $249,784.78. That is football in a fairly large way. The figure was $68,000 under the profits of 1929. . . . about $100,000 of the net profit represents "California Memorial Stadium Scrip," redeemed in exchange for tickets to the California-Stanford big game. . . . the profits will go toward carrying on the Association's spring program which includes 15 sports, all of which operate at a loss.

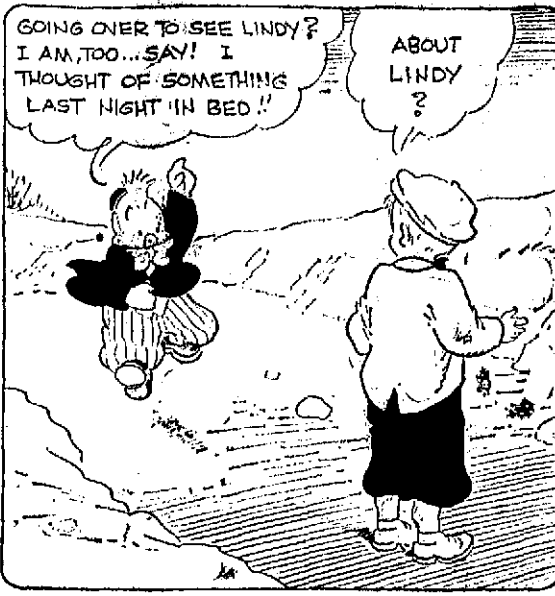

start schools in the west and mid-west do not hold the sacred trio of old in any reverence. Football supremacy is no longer vested in these eastern seats.

But the Big Three was the cradle of football. The football world that has swept beyond the confines of a little triangle glances back to that cradle with a respectful memory. The Carleidos and the Bobby Dods, and the Marshall Duffields may perform great deeds in our day—but there are the traditions of Walter Camp, Percy Haughton, Hector Cowan, the game at "Bloody Angle," Bruke Thorne and Tack Hardwick. When the Big Three was in its heyday men of might reared across its gridirons. They have left glorious names and stories.

Tradition is closely interwoven into the fabric of football and has played an important part in its progress. For that reason, it is pleasant to think of the old Big Three as going on together—not quarreling over what is laughingly trivial.

That is why Yale's newest gesture seems to be a good deed in a naughty world.

Grid Captain Gets Form Wrestling on Mat Squad

STILWATER, Okla.—(AP)—Chester Dotter of Stilwater went out for wrestling to learn timing, and thus become a better football player.

It worked, for Dotter was named captain of the 1931 Oklahoma Aggie gridiron squad.

At the same time he gained considerable skill in the mat game. This season he represents his school in the 175-pound division, helping defend the national championship owned by Aggie champions.

... one of 56 health officials from 56 different points approving Cremo's crusade against spit or spit-tipping.

Every smoker, every wife whose husband smokes cigars, should read Dr. White's letter.

"Who are the friends of 'Spit'?"

YOU MAY WELL ASK THIS QUESTION WHEN 56 IMPORTANT HEALTH OFFICIALS HAVE WRITTEN SO STRONGLY AGAINST THE EVILS OF SPIT OR SPIT-TIPPING.

Dr. White writes: "Most diseases enter the body through the mouth."

The war against spit is a crusade of decency. Join it... Smoke Certified Cremo—a really wonderful smoke—mild—mellow—nut-sweet! Every leaf entering the clean, sunny Cremo factories is scientifically treated by methods recommended by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Gentlemen:

I consider from a health standpoint the present advertising now running on Cremo cigars to be one of the foremost helps in improving hygiene conditions.

Most diseases enter the body through the mouth. The complete elimination of spit in the manufacture by modern methods of Cremo Cigars, will, in my opinion, prevent smokers of cigars from being subject to any possible danger of disease from this source and wish to commend The American Cigar Company for their efforts to improve health conditions by adopting new, scientific standards of manufacture.
